The image shows the front cover of an antique book. The binding is made of a light brown, heavily worn leather. On the left side, the spine is visible, featuring five raised bands and two metal clasps. The front cover itself has a blind-stamped design, including a central rectangular panel with a smaller rectangle inside it, and a border of small squares. The leather is discolored and shows signs of age and use.

The image displays two pages from a historical Japanese technical manual, likely related to military engineering or construction. The left page features a diagram of a crane (kumogata) with a long, angled boom supported by a pulley system. A person is shown at the base, operating the crane. The right page shows a similar diagram, but with a different configuration of the crane's support and pulley system. Both pages are filled with handwritten Japanese text, which appears to be instructions or descriptions of the machinery. The text is written in a cursive style typical of Edo-period documents. The diagrams are simple line drawings, using perspective to show the three-dimensional structure of the crane. The overall layout is typical of a technical manual, with the diagram on the left and the accompanying text on the right.
